Love Begins at 40 Two Famed Stage Favorites Declare

YOUTH ISN'T ALL First of a Series About Folks Who Found Romance Late

This is the first of a series of six stories on "Love Begins at 40," written for NEA Service, about prominent personalities who have found romance long after the days of youth have passed.

By WILLIS THORNTON
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

Say what you will, people love longer than they used to.

Cupid who once specialized on short, plump, red target work among the blushing and beardless, has been trying out his long-distance arrows at ranges of 40 years and over, with astonishing accuracy.

In fact, the recent romantic accomplishments of lady and ladies in their frisky forties have eclipsed the amorous achievements of the traditionally tender twenties. Though with love at 30. Nonsense! Why, love begins at 40!

Ask Anyone on This List

Ask Elsie Ferguson, perennially lovely American actress, who, at 49, has just married Victor Egan, Irish sportsman. Ask Mrs. Madeline Force Dick, who celebrated that turning point of 40 by marrying Enzo Fiermonte, 26-year-old boxing instructor to her grown sons.

Ask John Barrymore, great lover of state and screen, who at 46 launched on a marriage with the lovely and youthful Dolores Costello, with enviable success. Ask Governor Pollard of Virginia, or Elsie Janis, or Sinclair Lewis, or Jimmy Walker, or Pitt Stillman McCormick, or the wife of Senator Jim Reed who used to be Nell Quinlan Donnelly.

All of them could tell you that love is not frightened away by the sight of the first gray hair—that love begins at 40!

Romance Far Past 40

Honeymooning today in one of Europe's pleasure spots, Elsie Ferguson knows that there may be romance at 49, and Victor Augustus Seymour Egan, her bridegroom, knows that there may be romance even at 59.

No handsomer couple has appeared at London's old Caxton Hall registry office for a marriage ceremony in many a month than the tall, energetic sportsman, Egan, and his bride, who were a long, light-fitting beige spring coat, a fur necktie and muff, and a large black straw hat.

Present was the bridegroom's son, tall, handsome Lieutenant Rupert Egan, for this is Victor Egan's second marriage, and Elsie Ferguson's fourth.

Following the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Egan went to a fashionable west

As all of us know, the majority of the dollars spent in Hope come from beyond our city line. Few communities in any agricultural section have sufficient industrial payrolls to maintain their mercantile institutions—and therefore it is vital that we go after the trade in the vast territory surrounding us.

In this day of quick and cheap transportation one city is in sharp competition with another, and the aggressor gets the business.

All through the panic years The Star has maintained a trade territory circulation nearly twice its city list—and our neighbors therefore have had our city's name before them constantly, and we trust favorably.

Now is the time to follow up the business revival. The panic unquestionably is passing away. The St. Louis Federal Reserve District reports today that store business throughout this territory was 49 per cent better this March than March a year ago; and the first three months of 1934 were 34 per cent better than the same period last year.

The newspaper's figures, and the figures of leading local stores, reflect individual gains which sustain these averages.

X X X

Last night the House of Representatives and the Senate conference committee ironed out differences in the Bankhead bill and we may expect shortly that very nearly the original compulsory cotton control bill will be written into federal law.

Whether this severe policing of free and independent agriculture will work—whether it is in fact constitutional—remains to be seen.

But it goes almost without argument that the people will demand that it be given a fair trial.

The voluntary acreage reduction plan met with reasonable success. And like it, the Bankhead compulsory bill is advanced mainly as an emergency plan.

Our people should understand that the problem before the South is to produce less cotton at a higher price, until President Roosevelt has rebuilt the tariff and foreign trade treaty machinery so that our agricultural products can once more enter the export market without bankrupting the home producer.

It is a strange situation—but boiled down to its essentials, it is not something new, but an emergency plan to give the government time to straighten out old abuses of the tariff.

That makes it more plain—and millions of cotton-producing families will join Secretary Wallace in his prayer to speed the day when King Cotton once more can be turned loose to roam the markets of the world at will.

State Patrol Is Checking Licenses

1934 Plates Must Show, and Headlights Must Be Correct

A warning to automobile owners and operators was issued here Thursday by W. E. Armstrong and J. L. Farmer, state highway patrolmen, who will be in Hope the balance of this week checking up on license plates and traffic regulations.

Two headlights and at least one tail light must be displayed on all passenger cars. The same applies to trucks. Trailers must have a clearance light on the left side.

All state license plates except the 1934 tags must be removed. The new tags are to be placed on the rear of the car or truck, the patrolmen said.

Brashear Case May Be Tried 3rd Time

Defendant's Father Arrives at Circuit Court at Washington

Another echo of the June Brashear bank robbery case which has resulted in hung juries in two previous trials, was sounded Thursday when Brashear's father made an appearance at Washington where circuit court is in session.

Courthouse rumors had it that the defendant's father was completing arrangements for another trial at this time of court; however, the rumors could not be confirmed Thursday.

Brashear has been held in jail for nearly a year. His first trial was in January circuit court, the jury failing to agree. He went on trial again Monday of this week. A second jury, after three hours deliberation, was dismissed after failing to agree on a verdict. The elder Brashear is from Seminole, Okla.

Other court procedure Thursday was the revoking of a four-year suspended sentence given to Roosevelt Ferguson, negro, in October term of court on charges of burglary and grand larceny.

The negro was paroled to R. A. Carrigan of Ozark. He broke a pledge, fled to Howard county where he was arrested on a statutory charge.

A settlement for $100 was made to Frank Barr by Southern Ice & Utilities Co. for injuries received in a motorcycle-truck accident at Texarkana several months ago.

A damage suit brought by G. Williams against A. & P. grocery store was being heard Thursday afternoon.

Consent judgment for $1200 was rendered in favor of C. H. Butler against Hope Auto company. The case resulted from injuries sustained in an automobile wreck.

A case against Harvey Barr for alleged possession of cigarettes without proper revenue stamps, was dismissed.

The only trial set for Friday was Anna Bell Philbrick vs. Western Union in which she is suing for damages as a result of an accident in which she was run over at Little Rock by a bicycle ridden by a Western Union messenger.

First Trade Day Here Big Success

Thursday Business Highly Gratifying to Hope
Merchants

The city's first Trade Day was declared a success Thursday by Syd McMath, secretary of the Young Business Men's association which sponsored the event.

A personal survey conducted by Mr. McMath among merchants co-operating with the association disclosed a much larger volume of business than the usual Thursday transactions.

One merchant reported at noon that his business had already passed that of the entire day Thursday of last week.

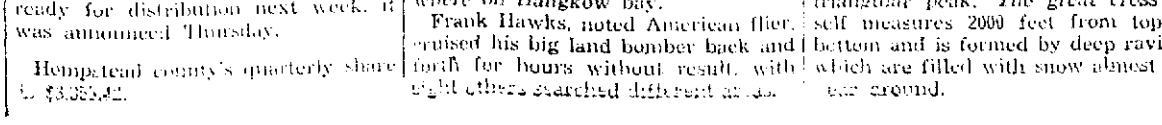

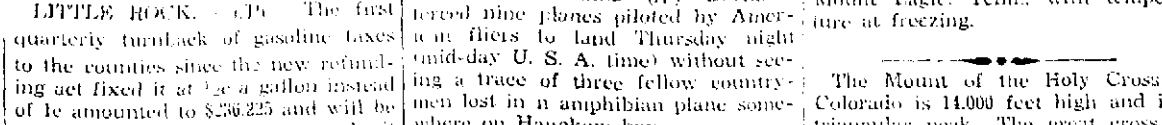

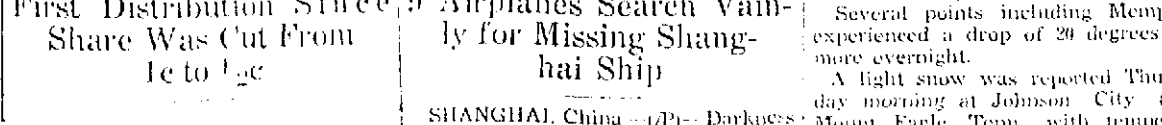

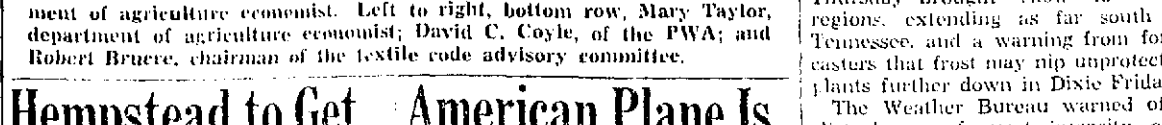

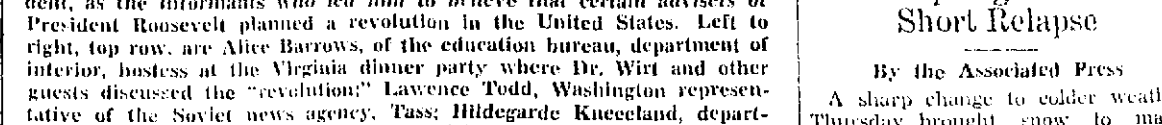

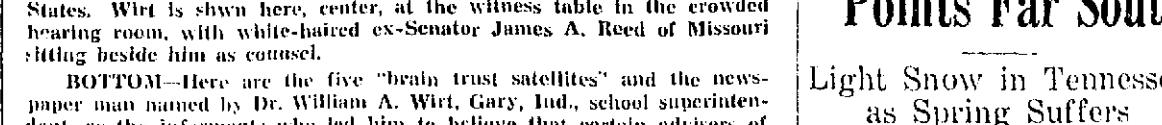

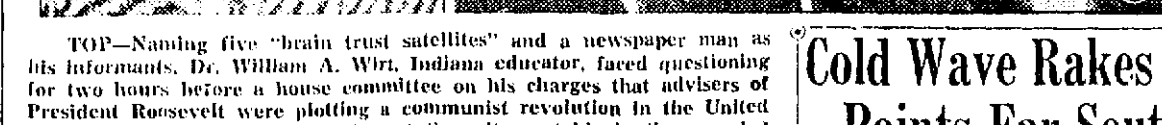

Approximately 400 persons attended the auction sale held at 10 o'clock Thursday morning at the Price, L. & A. depot, conducted by Silas Sanford, auctioneer. L. L. Ruggles served as clerk.

Coach Teddy Jones, representing the young men's organization, made the introductory remarks at the sale.

At 1 o'clock in the afternoon a drawing was to be held at the same location.

It was reported at 3 o'clock that 16 entrants had registered for the musical and old fiddler's contest which is to be held Thursday night, starting at 7:29 o'clock at the city hall.

Johnson Declares Roosevelt Favors Nat'l Labor Court

House Committee Recommends Paying Frozen Bank Deposits

ACCIDENT AVERTED

Johnson and Party Just Miss Death on Grade Crossing

EN ROUTE WITH PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT to Washington. (AP)—Recovery Administrator Johnson said Thursday after a conference with President Roosevelt he was not sure but what a recommendation might be made for an extension of the drastic licensing provision of the National Recovery Act (NRA) as a weapon of strict enforcement of the codes.

Johnson also disclosed that the president is in accord with his general support of the Wagner bill establishing by law a quasi-supreme court of industrial relations.

Johnson gave an optimistic report on the general business situation to the chief executive on his way northward from the president's vacation cruise.

Johnson and his party, including Donald Richman and the president's secretary, Marvin McIntyre, and a score of newspaper men and their wives, had a narrow escape at a grade crossing as a train just missed hitting a combination automobile trailer carrying the party to greet the president as he arrived in Miami, Fla., Thursday morning. The auto trailer barely cleared the track in time.

To Aid Frozen Deposits

WASHINGTON. (AP)—The house banking committee Thursday approved legislation to pay off depositors in closed national banks.

But it limited the amount which may be paid in full to $2,500.

This action came as 131 names were obtained to a petition to force the McLeod measure out of the committee to the house floor for a vote. It requires 145 to bring the measure to the floor of the house.

Senate Passes Tax Bill

WASHINGTON. (AP)—In two moves, the senate Wednesday adopted an emergency one-year 10 per cent additional tax on all individual tax returns in 1935 and disregarded President Roosevelt's objections by approving a processing tax on imported vegetable oils.

Democratic leaders spoke of threats of a veto for the revenue bill if the oil tax stayed in.

The vote for the Couzens amendment levying the 10 per cent added tax on income and surtax returns, estimated to raise another $55,000,000 in revenue, was 43 to 36 and was a reversal of Tuesday's 46-to-46 decision against the proposal. A motion by Senator Couzens, Republican, Michigan, to reconsider Tuesday's vote carried, 40 to 35.

Such a tax had not been requested by the administration and house Democratic leaders have announced they would oppose it unless the president said the added revenue was needed.

An agreement was reached to vote early Thursday on a proposal to boost inheritance taxes to raise $92,000,000 in additional revenue.

Light Snow in Tennessee
as Spring Suffers
Short Relapse

By the Associated Press

A sharp change to colder weather Thursday brought snow to many regions extending as far south as Tennessee, and a warning from forecasters that frost may nip unprotected plants further down in Dixie Friday.

The Weather Bureau warned of a disturbance of great intensity over Connecticut, moving northeastward, that promise gale winds in that region Thursday afternoon.

Much of the Great Lakes region had snow Thursday.

Several points including Memphis experienced a drop of 20 degrees or more overnight.

A light snow was reported Thursday morning at Johnson City and Mount Eagle, Tenn., with temperature at freezing.

The Mount of the Holy Cross in Colorado is 14,000 feet high and is a triangular peak. The great cross itself measures 2000 feet from top to bottom and is formed by deep ravines which are filled with snow almost the year around.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN Washington

Onslaught Is Terrific on Stock Market Bill . . . Civil War Looms on Exchange . . . Workers' Food Costs More in South . . . More Icebergs Expected This Summer.

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

NEA Washington Correspondent
WASHINGTON.—New Dealers find that the huge lobby fighting the stock market regulation bill, in size and persistence, surpasses anything veteran congressmen have ever seen.

One recent estimate was that 300 professional and volunteer lobbyists were here, actively opposing the Fletcher-Rayburn measure.

But Wall Street couldn't afford to be content with attacking the bill itself. It found little sympathy in Congress for stock markets and manipulators. So lobbyists raised the bogey of "business regimentation" and, to support their case, assailed NRA, AAA, the Brain Trust, and the New Deal.

The Jimmy Rand-Dr. Wirt onslaught was only a public manifestation of that. Such propaganda is dinned privately into congressional ears every day.

It ties in neatly with propaganda against the Wagner labor and unemployment insurance bills and the administration's communication control bill.

The effect is to undermine the morale of Congress. New Dealers pray for quick action on the stock market bill, "so that gang will get out of town."

But delay piles on delay, increasing the danger to the draft. Senator James Couzens, a supporter, predicts caustically that "it may be reported by Christmas."

"Latest" development is the action of the country's exchanges in submitting a substitute bill to the House interstate commerce committee.

This measure would liberalize requirements in the pending bill and place control of all stock exchanges with a commission of five, to be appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate.

Shouse Attire Lobbyist

Jouett Shouse, once Democratic executive chairman and later chief lobbyist for organized wets, is lobbying for the Association of Stock Exchange firms.

He has worked with Attorney Raul Desvernigne, whose New York law firm also represents U. S. Steel—a Morgan concern, closely allied with Wall Street.

Some of the most frantic lobbying comes from Wall Street inflationists, who campaigned for inflation in hopes of a cleanup when stock prices rose. Having seen some inflation and presumably some cleanup, this group hopes for more of both.

The Fletcher-Rayburn bill threatens to cramp its style "on the Street" by hampering manipulation.

Civil War Looms

A vicious struggle for control of the New York exchange is likely to follow enactment of the bill. The lobby is divided into two factions, which are now at each others' throats. The factions:

1. The exchange's insiders—bankers, floor traders, specialists, and others, headed by President Dick Whitney, brother of a Morgan partner. This strictly New York outfit has fed for years off broker business which comes over the wires from brokerage houses.

While skimming the cream, it has kept the exchange's constitution intact and prevented liberalization so as to hold a domination which would otherwise be exerted by brokers.

The insiders oppose any outside regulation. 2. The brokers, represented here by the A. S. E. F., who realized the inevitability of control and proved willing to go half way.

The blowup between them came when Desvernigne and Shouse produced a compromise bill. Some of their proposals influenced the framing of the revised Fletcher-Rayburn bill, which didn't do the insiders any good even though the others aren't satisfied.

Food Higher in South

That north-south wage differential in many codes has given NRA a troublesome controversy. But the first public data bearing on the merit of fixing lower minimum wages for southern workers comes from AAA rather than from General Johnson's research staff.

The AAA Consumers' Guide reveals that if workers in southern cities ate the same amounts and kinds of food as northern workers, their food would cost them more than the latter pay. A given typical assortment of food would cost a southern worker $283 and a northerner $278.

YOUR CHILDREN

By Olive Roberts Barton

Conflict Between Home and School—Contact Between Parent and Teacher Might Aid Child Problems

Home on one side—school on the other. It is about these two institutions that Olive Roberts Barton writes in this article in her series on Child Training.

There is a certain hiatus between home and school that sets the child's mind against the latter.

It comes about this way. In his home there is obedience but it is qualified. In school there is unqualified obedience.

At home his temperament is understood and he receives toleration according to circumstances. Little forays into mischief are understood and forgiven. Lapses from responsibility are not taken too seriously as a rule and "absolute" obedience is not expected.

In school he must fit to a system, somewhat military in its nature. It must be so, I think, in spite of all attempts to perfect the "experimental" or "progressive" public school plan.

Conforming to System

The hundreds of pupils to be handled in a building will always have to conform to some "set" system. Changes are being made and none too soon, to re-vamp the rigid exactness of the old system, but I doubt if it will ever reach the point where each child can be dealt with as an absolute individual.

Nor do I think it necessary. I believe that mass grouping and certain demands made on the child have their good points. The majority of normal children not only accept the situation, but do pretty well under it. The public school needs certain changes in purpose, as it exists today, and a change in ways of grading; also in methods of approach to study. But school can never be a party. It is intended to put stern stuff in children, and too much individualism is bad for the best of us.

However, there is something wrong when the attitude of children toward school is as unfriendly as it is. I have just said that they accept it, but it is with a sort of endurance that makes the best of a bad job. It could be different, and it will be, when the rapidly changing system gets to a point where the desire to learn is entrenched in the child's heart through his aroused interest. This will affect grading and placing. It will also affect the subjects studied.

A "Shuttle" That Fails

We must get it out of our heads, however, that the perfect school will allow children to dawdle, and that no discipline will be necessary. And we must also discard the idea that our Jimmy or our Mary will one day be allowed to study ONLY the things he likes. The state will always have something to say about this and it is right. School is not an indulgence.

Now we are just where we started. The home on one side, the school on the other, and the child in the middle, a shuttle that fails daily to weave them together. He goes home and we'll say, overindulged, he goes to school and is under-indulged. He feels that his parents have no real conception of his seven-hours-a-day away from them or the trouble he faces. It creates a pull away from the school, and there are pulls enough without that.

Encouraging Friendship

There should be a contact point. Parent-Teachers' meetings don't do it, although they are useful, of course. The trouble is that the child himself is seldom present to get the feeling of friendship between instructor and parent. In elementary schools there should be a plan that does not interfere with the teacher's work—as daily visits do—such as an open day once a month. No program should keep the children under a strain at the time as is too often the case.

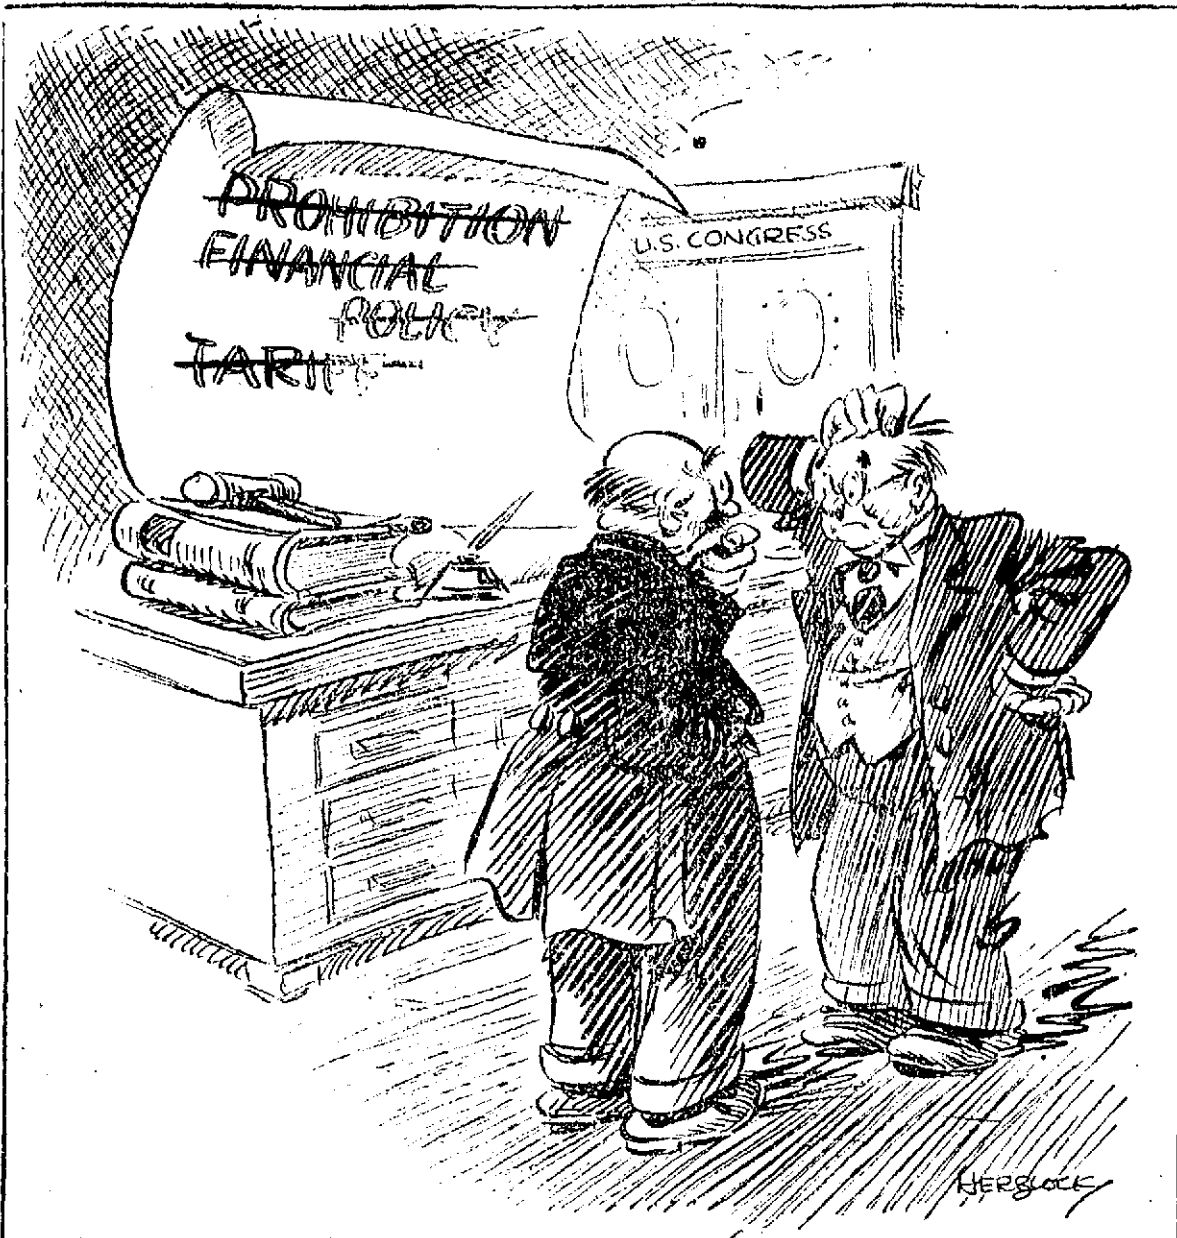

When the parent projects personality and interest into the school building by association of ideas and a feeling that his school work is discovered, the child will overcome his feeling of segregation. He will feel that he fits. He moves his "family feeling" to school because they have contacted it.

There might be another way, but it would have to be somewhat after this plan. It would be a wonderful help to the "prejudiced" child in particular.

Greatness has a way of seeing deeper than the common being. Like the brilliant ray which pierces thru opaque and solid masses, greatness straight thru shames can enter.

To the heart and to the center. Greatness seems to see life fully; never partly, never dully. Never to man's weakness blinded. Never proud and haughty minded. Having suffered, having sorrowed, knowing well how glories crumble. Greatness everywhere is humble. And it has a way of sharing. All the burdens men are bearing.

LOVE BEGINS

end hotel for a reception, and then departed on the honeymoon to an unannounced destination.

Play Lines Borne Out

Always retiring and unwilling to discuss her personal life, Elsie Ferguson made no public comment on her present marriage. But not long ago she said that the only lasting relationship between any two people must be based on a firm companionship. And one of her friends quoted her:

"When young, one dreams of love and ambition, and then only ambition. But one finally learns that for a woman happiness is dependent on having a strong, dependable man to lean on."

So she has found him, and the happiness in her soft eyes at her wedding reception testifies that love may still reveal its splendors at 42.

And the wedding guests thought back to Zoe Akins' play, "The Varying Shore," and of Elsie Ferguson speaking the lines: "After youth goes and wisdom comes and all the big sacrifices are made and the great moments are finished, life gets pleasanter every day."

Her Fourth Marriage

She has quit the stage for good. Elsie Ferguson said when her engagement to Egan was made known. Her first stage appearance was in "The Belle of New York," and from that point she went on to repeated stage triumphs and Hollywood success in the movies.

Her last Broadway appearance was in 1923.

Her first husband was Frederick C. Hony, son of the then president of the Adams Express Co. Her second was Thomas B. Clarke, Jr., of the Harriman National Bank, and her third was Frederick Worlock, an English actor.

All these marriages were grist for the divorce mill.

But Elsie Ferguson has retained the fresh beauty which endeared her to stage and screen audiences, and her engagement and marriage were no surprise to the friends who know her at Cannes, where she has for some years maintained a villa.

Egan is well known in racing and yachting circles, owning several yachts, and keeping a racing stable near Liverpool.

And these are the two who at 42 and 39 years, respectively, have found those years no handicap in the universal quest for love.

Elsie Janis 'Succumbs'

By no means all the people who go for love at 40 are "repeaters." Elsie Janis, for example, known for many years as "the bachelor girl of the stage," stepped gallantly at 42 with the youthful Gilbert Wilson, 28, and it was the first marriage for each of them. Thus, as Elsie herself said, "we both start from scratch."

Elsie Janis, known as "the sweet heart of the A. E. F.," from her work as entertainer with the overseas forces, received literally hundreds of proposals. But she resisted them all, happy in the constant company of her mother.

Many times she wrote articles on the joys of single blessedness, scoffed good naturedly at marriage.

And yet, at 42, when she met the youthful Wilson, love began for Elsie Janis. Though two years have passed since their wedding at Tarrytown, N. Y., the marriage is reported highly successful—up to now, as Miss Janis herself probably would prudently add.

Live Longer, Love Longer

The new Mrs. Egan and Mrs. Wilson are only two of the increasing number of young people of 40 and above who are proving that love, while it may still laugh at locksmiths, is positively guffawing at Pa Time these days, and that one of the reasons the Blind Bow-boy is blind is so he can't read the figures on a birth certificate.

In 1920, there were nearly seven million people in the country over 65 years old, whereas in 1870 there were only a million. That means nearly twice as many people per hundred living beyond 55 as there used to be.

People are definitely living longer. Is there any earthly reason why they shouldn't love longer, too?

There isn't, and they're proving every day that love begins at 40.

NEXT: Mrs. Madeline Force Astor Dick marries, at 40, the 26-year-old youth who was teaching boxing to her own children, and Vanderbilts and Stillmans join the love parade that marches beyond the 40-year mark.

ed in their efforts to exempt Philippine coconut oil from the proposed three-cents-a-pound processing tax on all imported vegetable oils.

Despite the leaders' references to Mr. Roosevelt's letter to the finance committee saying the tax was in direct violation of the Philippine independence act's provision not to restrict their coconut oil shipments to the United States, the senate approved the levy, 59 to 17.

However, the oil tax section was tempered somewhat by an amendment by Senator Norris, Republican, Nebraska, which would refund all taxes collected on the oils to the Philippine government provided that government grants no subsidies to its coconut growers.

Whether insertion of this amendment, which was believed acceptable in the Philippines, would remove presidential objections was not known.

There are several changes in the roll call Wednesday on the Couzens amendment. Couzens had switched Tuesday against his own proposal in order to move reconsideration, so he constituted one change Wednesday from "no" to "aye." Others who changed the same way were Clark, Democrat, Missouri, and McCarran, Democrat, Nevada.

Ninety votes were recorded Tuesday as against only 79 Wednesday. The amendment would add the 10 per cent to the amount of tax due from individuals next year on this year's income. If a taxpayer owed $100 in taxes he would be required to pay $110.

Fight Over Exchange Bill

WASHINGTON.—(P)—The first sharp issue between the house and senate on the stock exchange control bill was raised Wednesday by the latter's banking committee in voting out of the measure all specific figures fixing minimum margin requirements.

In their place, it wrote an amendment, offered by Senator Glass, Democrat, Virginia, which would leave the formulation of all margin regulations to the discretion of a proposed securities exchange commission, previously incorporated in the bill by the committee.

The house commerce committee already had gone on record favoring the inclusion of figures fixing exactly the lowest proportion of cash a purchaser of securities would be required to post as margin. This was done in instructing a sub-committee to revise the margin section and the determination of how high or low the figures should be was left to the subordinate group. It met Wednesday to consider a redraft.

As originally drafted, the bill specified a 60 per cent cash margin with the alternative that the customer might receive credit to the extent of 100 per cent of the lowest price the issue bought had reached in three years, but in no event was the margin to exceed 75 per cent of current market price.

This provision was made the target of the most direct and vigorous attack hurled against the bill by the New York Exchange. Its spokesmen argued that such an arrangement was inelastic, deflationary and held the threat of ruin for the brokerage business. It urged instead such a plan as was adopted Wednesday by the senate committee.

Local Negro Held Up, Robbed of $190

Jesse Smith Loses His Tax Money to Pair of Negro Hijackers

Jesse Smith, negro of near Red Lake, was held up and robbed here Wednesday of $190 by two negro bandits who escaped in an old model Chevrolet sedan.

The robbery occurred shortly after noon near Shover street school. Smith told police the two hijackers approached him and ask for help to repair their car, which was parked alongside the road.

As Smith stepped out of his own car one of the robbers flashed a gun while the other searched him.

After obtaining Smith's money the robbers fled in a southern direction and disappeared. Smith said he intended to pay his taxes with the money.

Both robbers were about 30 years old and were unmasked.

House and Senate Agree on Cotton

Bankhead Bill Virtually Restored to Its Original Form

WASHINGTON.—(P)—An agreement was reached Wednesday on the Bankhead cotton control bill which, conferees said, restored the measure to a form closely paralleling the measure that passed the house.

The conferees refused to disclose all details pending a final session Thursday but it was said the 50 per cent ad valorem tax in the house bill was agreed upon. The conferees were absent and announcement of the agreement was withheld for that reason.

The senate bill would have taxed all cotton above the 10,000,000 bales allotment in the measure 75 per cent of its value at the time of ginning. Elimination of the exemption from tax of cotton produced by any farmer whose total crop did not amount to more than six bales was agreed upon early in the parleys between the senate and house conferees. Proponents of the first major measure for the control of one of the nation's principal crops said that exemption would have made the bill futile.

One-Year-Term

The house bill would have made the measure operative for two years with the president having the power to extend it a third year. Conferees indicated the bill as it stands now—and as it will be in final form—will be operative for one year but it may apply another year through presidential proclamation should that be necessary to bring the cotton surplus to normal.

The conferees also decided to restore penal sections of the house bill. These were riddled in by senate amendments.

11th Dillinger Pal Dies From Wounds

Eugene Green Succumbs to Officers' Guns at St. Paul

ST. PAUL, Minn.—(P)—Another victim of association with John Dillinger died Wednesday.

And within a few hours of the death of Eugene Green in a hospital here from gunshot wounds, authorities in Chicago believe they had found once more a war trail in their hunt for the Indiana outlaw. Federal agents there were reported to have captured and to be questioning Evelyn Prochett, companion of the desperado on several recent flights from justice.

Green, who fled with Dillinger from an apartment here March 31, was wounded three days later as he was taken by government agents.

His death is the eleventh which officers have ascribed directly or indirectly to Dillinger's career of crime. A brain infection resulting from gunshot wounds was the immediate cause of his death.

The senate changed the bill to place the allotments on the basis of cotton produced during the past 10 years but the conferees were reported to have decided to make the past five years the quota basis. This provision was in the house bill.

Every year malaria-bearing mosquitoes are responsible for the deaths of between two and three million people.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
PABLITO, a handsome youth, became a fugitive when he fled from Ray West, known as BEAU and LOTTIE, two thieves. Pablito had been accused of a murder he did not commit. MAIL-CLERK TREADWAY, socially prominent, could prove he is innocent but feels scandal.

Pablito is in love with ESTELLE FIELD, daughter of rich JIM FIELD, in Havana, under the name "Jennie." He becomes a fugitive as a boxer and Beau opens a gymnasium.

SIR AUBREY, a titled Englishman and Pablito's father, is searching for his son, employing BILLINGS, New York detective. Three years pass and then Pablito sees Estelle again. They admit they love each other and meet secretly until Estelle's father takes her away on a yacht cruise. Among the guests on the yacht is ALEC DAVIDS, who wants to marry Estelle for her money.

Meanwhile Billings, convinced Pablito is Sir Aubrey's son and innocent of the charge, sets to work to prove this.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER XXXVII

ONE evening in late summer Pablito appeared in the doorway of Beau's sleeping room. "Beau," he said.

"Come in," the other invited. Beau was stretched out at full length on the bed. He added, as Pablito closed the door behind him, "Hand me a cigaret, will you?"

Pablito rummaged about the bureau in the old, slow way that had been his immediately after their escape from Field's camp. Beau had noticed that this manner had returned.

"A match," he prompted.

Pablito supplied the match and held it, cupped between his palms, as Beau lit up. "Well, what's the trouble?" Beau asked then.

Pablito dropped to a chair by the bed. He ran his hands through his thick, light hair. Then, he bowed his head and eyes averted, began to tell Beau slowly and falteringly about Estelle; of how she was forced to comply with her father's demands because Field believed Pablito had murdered Jeffries.

Beau raised himself on one elbow. "Hell, kid," he questioned, "What can I do about it? I love life myself."

"I know," Pablito admitted wearily, "I don't know why I'm talking. I wouldn't have you give yourself up—you know that. But I'm about half-crazy with things as they are."

Beau broke into this monologue. "Look here, kid! You'll get over being so choosy in time. Women, they're all alike."

"Not when you feel as I do."

"Well, all right. Have your own way about it but just the same they are. Look here—I didn't want to tell you what I know, but I guess I'll do it. Maybe it'll make you stop this mooning. That Field dame's engaged to a guy named Davids."

PABLITO sat back, eyes unbelieving.

"See it in a New York newspaper," Beau confided. "Did you—save the paper?"

"Yes, it's in the bureau drawer there. The top one. Under them socks. Well, maybe it's in the other drawer. Oh, my God, you ain't looked! Try the next one."

Pablito found the newspaper and sat down to read. It was there, just as Beau had said. Beneath a portrait of Estelle, a little smeared in the printing but all too clear, he read: "Society has been expecting the news for some time. Mr. Alec Davids who has been cruising with Mr. and Miss Field on Mr. Field's yacht."

Pablito found he could not read it quickly. He had to go back to the beginning and start over again. The words arranged themselves crazily. But at length he had finished the entire, rather wordy paragraph underneath the portrait.

He stood then, trembling and clutching the newspaper. He stared down at Estelle's picture, then abruptly left the room.

Beau called after him to say something about the man named Billings who had called that day. Billings had said he must see Pablito about a matter that was important.

Later, though not much later, Beau, who was still in bed, looked up to see Pablito once more before him. Pablito was wearing a suit that had been made for traveling and not for a Cuban evening. "Gimme a cigaret—" Beau ordered. Pablito gave him the package. As he stopped with a lighted match burning blue beneath his palms he said slowly, "I'm leaving, Beau."

"Where you going?"

"I don't know."

"What about your letters?"

"There won't be any letters you need to forward. There'll be none that matter." Pablito smiled as he spoke. It was a smile that Beau didn't exactly like. "My God," he thought, "the kid is hit!"

"Look here, kid," he protested. "That Billings was here again today. He said he's got to see you. Seemed to be all het up about something. Came all the way from New York to see you, he said. You can't go without—"

Billings was probably selling something, Pablito decided slowly and heavily. He remembered that Billings looked like a salesman—the sort who always come all the way from some very distant point to sell some one thing to one particular man.

"Tell him I never buy oil stock," he answered. Then he thought of Sir Aubrey and the fact that Sir Aubrey had been Billings' friend. But the Englishman could have written anything he cared to tell him, Pablito decided surely.

"Honest, I think you're makin' a mistake," Beau persisted. "I had a kind of feelin' when he come that something real important was up. He sort of looked that way. When 'll you be back, kid?"

"I don't know."

"Well—so long. We'll miss you!"

Pablito went down the stairs and out under the blackness and the twinkling fires that make the Cuban sky. He had not said make up for physical defections. No amount of beauty can make up for lack of thoughtfulness and kindness. The young girl who always rises when an older woman or older man, to if he warrants any particular respect or courtesy enters the room, and who is considerate of persons her own age, gets farther in the long run, regardless of her natural beauty.

There is not reason to be self-conscious about your manners. Practices them on the family at home and be polite to everyone with whom you come in contact. That way, you'll never make unforgivable mistakes when you're "out in company" dealing with strangers.

The mountain lion has the widest range of all game animals; it is found from British Columbia to the southernmost point of South America.

to Lottie. His lips were no longer Estelle's but he would not touch them—even casually—to any other woman's lips. He could not do that yet.

"Oh, God!" he whispered harshly, although his God was far from him. This was more hideous than the awakening from any dream he had ever known.

ESTELLE did not see the announcement of her engagement in the New York newspaper but she and her father returned there and the big stone town house was once more opened. There she became acquainted with the news through the congratulations of her friends. She denied the truth of the engagement ardently. Too ardently, it was murmured with smiles.

"But it really isn't true!" Estelle repeated. The year that had passed since she had left Cuba had wrought unpleasant changes. She was less certain now that even Pablito could measure up to the standards she had once believed were his. She could not, with the new wisdom she had acquired, believe that anyone could be as good as she had supposed him to be. She was less certain about everything, in fact, except the misery with which she must be surrounded while she lived with her father.

Occasionally she realized that her only escape lay in marriage. As she thought of this she also realized that Alec Davids was kind. Very kind, she believed this. "My dear," he asked often, "how much longer must I watch you suffer from your obstinacy? You don't know how it hurts me when I want to make you happy!"

Alec had passed the period when he had thought the game so easy as to be uninteresting. Inwardly now he fumed at Estelle's "devilish stubbornness" and more than ever he was determined to win her. He almost hated her because of the way she kept him dangling with her repeated withdrawals. "Well, she'll learn a few things," he vowed, "after I've got her where she's going to be!"

"Keep up your heart, my boy," Field would encourage him warmly. And with sly keenness he would disparage Alec in Estelle's hearing. She seemed to look at Alec more gently after these attacks on him by her father. They made her wonder if, after all, it wouldn't be better to say "yes" to Alec and have it over with.

"I'll never be able to have what I want," Estelle reasoned. "Perhaps, after all, I dreamed most of it."

Yet remembering Pablito could fill her eyes with tears, so she thought of him as little as possible. Those about her spoke admiringly of the fact that Estelle was always gay and "ready for any sort of fun." She crowded her waking hours until there was little time left for thought and those who spoke of her laughter did not pause to reflect that really happy humans are not in need of "any sort of good time," nor searching for it.

Rainey Nominated Again in Illinois

Democratic Speaker Has Little Trouble in State Primary

CHICAGO.—(AP)—In the country's first state-wide primary since the national Democratic landslide, Illinois voters Tuesday apparently chose, with one exception, nominees backed by the regular Republican and Democratic organizations.

On the basis of incomplete returns, 16 Democratic incumbents in congress were named to represent their party again in the November election. A 17th, Walter Nesbit of Belleville, apparently lost to another candidate backed by his party organization.

Democratic leaders, admitting that little of the campaign had been based on controversies over the New Deal, however, they regarded the wholesale renomination as endorsements for national and state administrations.

Only in two congressional districts—the Twentieth, home of Speaker Henry T. Rainey, and the Tenth—were there fights that might be construed as involving aspects of the Roosevelt regime.

Rainey, up for Democratic renomination, claimed in the campaign in which he took but little part that Wall Street poured money in the district to defeat him. Early returns showed under his opponent, John H. Kirby, former state legislator.

In the Tenth district, one in which the outcome still was in doubt, Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes had given approval to the Republican candidacy of Ralph Church over Congressman James Simpson Jr., son of a wealthy Chicago family. Early returns gave Church a slight edge.

Among the six Republican incumbents who apparently won renomination is Chicago's negro first district congressman, Oscar de Priest.

Laboratory Workers Save Dog From Death In Odd Mishap

Free Setter In Solid Block of Asphalt

"DUKE," a twelve-year old English setter, a chemical laboratory, a group of research chemists, a contingent of CWA workers and a mass of congested asphalt recently figured in an unusual dog story.

It all started when Duke fell into a sewer trap in Parkersburg, West Virginia. Asphalt had seeped into the sewer trap and before Duke knew it he was submerged in asphalt, with only his eyes and his nose protruding. By chance he was discovered in this predicament by a group of CWA workers.

Initial attempts to extricate the dog were futile. The asphalt had congealed until Duke was literally imprisoned in a cake of asphalt. At first rescuers thought the dog was dead; but a pleading moan revealed that he was still alive and the laborers set to work frantically to rescue him.

What they finally pulled out of the sewer trap was a block of asphalt with only the pleading eyes and the nose of a splendid English setter revealing themselves. Duke was immediately taken to the nearby Parkersburg refinery laboratory of the Standard Oil Company of Louisiana, where the laboratory specialists were called upon to devise some means of removing the asphalt from the dog.

The chemists left their test tubes and concentrated on saving Duke. Lubricating oil was tried but it didn't work. They it was decided to risk the use of kerosene, and they bathed him in a mixture of hot kerosene and lubricating oil. Bit by bit the asphalt was dissolved. Soap and water baths removed the oil and kerosene.

That night Duke slept in the warm and comfortable chemical laboratory, surrounded by test tubes and the paraphernalia used to develop improved oils and gasoline. By morning Duke was a completely recovered dog. His owner was finally located and called for the dog.

Until I saw the Oaf against Tommy Loughran a few weeks ago in sun-kissed Florida in the battle of the fractured arches. That Sharkey affair stuck in the memory. But now I can see how bad Sharkey really was that night last summer, and how actually ineffective the Oaf is.

After the 10th round, the Oaf hit Tommy with all he had. And if it wasn't enough to put away doddering old Thomas, it will be just a pat or two to this gorilla with the tassel on his cap.

Loughran let me in on a few things down in Miami that night. In one of the early rounds, he let go with a right hand that he brought all the way from Philadelphia via Air Express. The boys back in the two-bit pews saw it coming. The Oaf was as wide open as a New Orleans bar, and that right hand went right to the button.

But Baer has it. Four old Tommy didn't have it, of course. He never was a hitter, and hasn't improved with age. But that right hand knocked the Oaf cockoo, just the same. The ancient Loughran chilled the Bir Stiff for just a few fleeting seconds. The Oaf shook it off, came back all hot and bothered and stopped on Tommy's dogs, but that isn't the moral of the story.

What I'm trying to say is that there is some connection between the Oaf's jaw and his brain cells, after all. And if old Thomas' feeble right could put a couple of brain cells on half time for a few seconds, it appears to me that the Oaf is vulnerable.

My picture is Baer swinging his right hand against the same point of contact. What a crash that's going to be!

Gypsies were given their names because they were thought to have come from Egypt; the actual original home of the nomadic gypsy tribes was in India, on the Ganges river, however.

"Wagon Wheels" Is "Tibbett Song" Says Radio Public

There are songs of the South and the West that the public recognizes with the powerful voice and the character interpretation of Lawrence Tibbett. He has made such compositions American classics. "Wagon Wheels," Tibbett's currently popular song from the new "Polities," has been requested on the Tibbett program by an avalanche of letters, and Tibbett is more than pleased to sing this request number on Monday night.

The scenes in this song, the faithful mule, the noise of the old wagon wheels, the hope of glimpse to the world beyond, at this world's journey's end—strike in Tibbett's deepest note of sympathy and musical appreciation.

On Tibbett's program Monday night are also "De Glory Road," by Wolfe, which Tibbett has made famous; the "Foreword Song" from "Carmen," by Bizet, and "Schubert's Serenade." William Daly's orchestra will play "Caracas" from "Flying Down to Rio," Harvey S. Firestone, Jr., will give another brief talk on "The Story of Transportation."

The program is at 8:30 p.m. over the N.B.C.—WEAF Network.

Modern Machine Tells Working of Body

In many ways, machinery is being brought to the bedside, to the hospital, and to the laboratory, to aid medical study and care of the sick.

There are microscopes which magnify the appearance of cells, secretions, and excretions hundreds of times. There are even ultra-microscopes which make apparent the presence of bodies too small to be seen with the most powerful of microscopes.

There are electrically lighted machines with which the doctor can look into all cavities of the human body. There are X-ray machines which Measuring the chemical changes in a person's body by means of small metabolic apparatus, make it possible for him to see the outlines of most of the organs.

Other X-ray machines are used to trace cancers and to destroy new growths on the surface of the body. X-ray machines measure chemical changes that go on in the body. This device, the basal metabolic apparatus, is one of the most important used in medicine today.

Its use is simple. You go to the office where the basal metabolic apparatus is available. You go in the morning before eating breakfast, so that your body may not be busy at the time digesting food.

Now you lie down and rest for an hour so that your body may not be busy with activities associated with cular exercise. Next you merely breathe through a tube into a closed system.

By the use of certain chemicals and certain mathematical estimations, the doctor can measure the rate at which your body is using up oxygen. In some diseases, particularly in very severe overactivity of the thyroid gland, the basal metabolism rate will be found to be high. In other diseases, particularly in people who are very fat, the basal metabolism frequently is found to be very low.

Methods have been discovered for speeding up the basal metabolism. One of these methods involves the use of extracts of the thyroid gland; the other, the use of drugs, such as dinitrophenol, which have been shown to have special power to raise the basal metabolic rate.

However, any drug strong enough to change completely the speed of chemical reactions in the body is one that should not be taken except under direction of a doctor. People who are taking drugs of this kind for reducing purposes should have their basal metabolic rates and their temperatures investigated regularly.

This is the only way to insure safety. Dinitrophenol can speed up the basal metabolism rate to such extent that it fairly burns up the body and produces a fever.

Sister MARY'S KITCHEN

By SISTER MARY
NEA Service Staff Writer

Mary a housewife has lived to a ripe old age without discovering that you can do more with the crisp radish than serve it raw with the celery and olives as an hors d'oeuvre. But now that they come three bunches for a gargantuan how about trying radish sandwiches on your card.

Tomorrow's Menu

Breakfast: Orange juice, cereal, cream, crisp bacon, graham muffins, milk, coffee.

Luncheon: Surprise baked potatoes, hearts of celery, toasted muffins, black cherries and bananas in lemon jelly with whipped cream, milk, tea.

Dinner: Ham loaf, twice baked sweet potatoes, radishes au gratin, cabbage and tomato salad, old-fashioned bread, pudding with hard sauce, milk, coffee.

club; creamed radishes on the family and radishes au gratin on the next guest Papa brings home?

Contain Minerals

Minerals and ballast are the radish's contribution to food values, but its chief mission in the raw is to look pretty on the table and tempt the appetite. The small red ones are particularly colorful—breakfast radishes they are called for no adequate reason and the French eat them with butter which isn't such a mess at all. There is also a long red variety, rather inclined to woolliness, a round pithy and a long white which can be bite-y on the tongue unless plucked while extremely young and tender.

Sandwiches are best made with the white radish although the red may be used. Served with fish salads, these sandwiches add zest to a party menu.

Cut crisp, well-washed radishes in thin slices and arrange them on thin slices of buttered bread. Sprinkle lightly with salt, cover with another thin slice of buttered bread and serve.

Creamed radishes done like creamed carrots are both good and pretty. Radishes au gratin are even more so. Women in the country who face a fresh vegetable shortage in the late spring and early summer will find these suggestions worth keeping in mind.

Three cups round red radishes, 2 tablespoons butter, 1 tablespoon flour, 3/4 cup milk, 1/4 cup water in which radishes were parboiled, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 4 tablespoons grated cheese, 4 tablespoons buttered bread crumbs.

Wash radishes carefully and cut off root and stem. Cook in boiling salted water for 15 minutes. Drain from water, saving 1 tablespoonfuls for sauce. Put radishes into a buttered baking dish and cover with sauce made with butter and flour cooked together with milk and radish water.
